

H 667
88

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

Bacon, Shakespeare, and the Rosicrucians.

“A most remarkable book. Like its predecessor, ‘A New Study of Shakespeare,’ one cannot open it without learning something. . . . But all the same the book is a curiosity, and no SHAKESPEARE-BACON LIBRARY SHOULD BE WITHOUT IT.”—Shakspeariana (New York).

“A noteworthy attempt has been made to fix the disputed authorship of the Shakespearian, and likewise of other writings, upon a set of literary eccentricities who existed in Shakespeare’s time under the name of ‘Rosicrucians,’ after one Christian Rosenkreuz, a German noble of the fifteenth century. The fame of this curious literary ‘sect’ has just been revived by Mr W. F. C. Wigston. He endeavours to show that there existed in Shakespeare’s day a learned college of men who wrote in secret, among whom were Lord Bacon, Sir Philip Sydney, Shakespeare, and Ben Jonson, and that these together concocted the plays.”—Westminster Review.

“If Mr Donnelly’s ‘great cryptogram’ should turn out to be a real discovery, we do not see why Mr Wigston’s should not be so too. We fully believe that the two theories must stand or fall together.”—Notes and Queries.

Opinion of Mr James Hughan, author of many Masonic books, and reputed to be the highest Masonic authority in England:—“I have carefully read your able article in the journal of the Bacon Society with great interest and much appreciation. Prima facie, the case is made out, it appears to me, but beyond that I cannot go at present; but the evidence is so remarkable, as well as curious, that no one of a thoughtful mind could possibly refuse your claim to consideration. The New Atlantis seems to be, and PROBABLY IS, THE KEY to the modern Rituals of Free-masonry. YOUR NOBLE VOLUME on Bacon, Shakespeare, and the Rosicrucians does much to clear the way.”

“The most powerful argument yet issued on the Baconian side.”—Information.

“I have found it an intensely interesting work. You are steadily pushing open a door that leads to a great discovery.”—IGNATIUS DONNELLY, Author of “The Great Cryptogram.”

“We hail with satisfaction the publication of Mr Wigston’s remarkable and learned work on a subject of which others have thought and discoursed, especially with regard to the sonnets, but which is for the first time brought forward in print with a boldness and ability which must rank the author as first amongst the pioneers in this newly opened mine of truth.”—The Bacon Journal.

“It is further admittedly curious, and we readily give Mr Wigston the benefit of the fact, that among the ‘misleaders’ whom the Confessio advises its disciples to have nothing to do with, ‘one of the greatest’ is stated to be a ‘stage player, a man with sufficient ingenuity for imposition.’”—Light.

“The volume contains much that is most interesting.”—Glasgow Herald.

A

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Demj 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

A New Study of Shakespeare.

“Certainly the most noteworthy and valuable of all the works elucidating the inner meaning of the greatest poet of modern times which have appeared. The books on Shakespeare, and his writings, would of themselves make a respectable library, numerically considered. Most of them, however, are superficial and of small value, and many are absolutely worthless. The book under consideration, published anonymously in 1884, seems not to have received the careful attention which it undoubtedly merits. It is evidently the production of a scholar and thinker who has given the Shakespearean writings a critical and exhaustive examination.”—The Platonist.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Hermes Stella ;

OR,

Notes and Jottings upon the Bacon Cipher.

“I read your book with the highest interest and pleasure, from the first page to the last. I think you have proved your case, and brought forward some curious and novel facts. There is, I think, no doubt that there is a cipher in the prose works of Lord Bacon, as you suggest.”—Letter from Honourable IGNATIUS DONNELLY, Author of “Great Cryptogram,” &c., 12th July 1890.

“Mr Wigston apologises for the style of this book on the ground that it is ‘only a collection of rough notes hurried into print by circumstances connected with the theft of a portion of the manuscript.’ No doubt he fears lest some future Shakespeare, who is the thief, may hereafter get the credit of a work so erudite and so valuable.”—The Bookseller.

“Rough and unmethodical as the book is, however, it shows prodigious research and study, and a really extraordinary ingenuity.”—Publishers’ Circular.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.,

57 AND 59 LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

1000000000

FRANCIS BACON,
POET, PROPHET, PHILOSOPHER.

PRINTED BY
TURNBULL AND SPEARS,
EDINBURGH.

QVOD FELICITER VORTIAS REIP: LITERARIAE
 V.C. FRAN. DE VERV. SACRO PHILOSOPH. LIBERTATIS
 ASSERTOR AVDAX, SCIENTIARV REPARATOR FELIX
 MVVA DI MENTISQ MAGNVS ARBITER INCVLTIS
 MAC: TERRARVM ORBIS ACAD: OXON: CANTAB: FRANC
 SVAM INSTAVR: VOTO SUSCEPTO VIVVS DECERNEBAT
 OBISTI VNON: APRIL: II D: N: KAROLI. I.
 PP AVG: clb Idc: xxvi.