

WILLIAM HOGARTH

*"Derisor lepidus, sed & severus,
Corrector gravis, at nec inveniustus."*

VINCENT BOURNE.

"In the Works of Cervantes or Hogarth, he is, I believe, a wretched Judge, who discovers no new Beauties on a second, or even a third Perusal."

HENRY FIELDING.

"He may be said to be the first, who has wrote Comedy with his Pencil."

ARTHUR MURPHY.

"It was character, the passions, the soul that his genius was given him to copy."

HORACE WALPOLE.

"They [his pictures] have this in them besides, that they bring us acquainted with the every-day human face . . . and prevent that disgust at common life, that tadium quotidianarum formarum, which an unrestricted passion for ideal forms and beauties is in danger of producing."

CHARLES LAMB.

"He was one of the greatest comic geniuses that ever lived. . . . His pictures are . . . rich, exuberant moral satires, exposing vice and folly in their most ludicrous points of view, and, with a profound insight into the weak sides of character and manners in all their tendencies, combinations, and contrasts."

WILLIAM HAZLITT.

"The offences of Hogarth against decency are few,—for the most part latent, and never mischievous, because never alluring."

HARTLEY COLERIDGE.
