

2/186
42

MENTAL AND MORAL SCIENCE.

BY

ALEXANDER BAIN, LL.D.,
PROFESSOR OF LOGIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.

PART SECOND.

THEORY OF ETHICS
AND ETHICAL SYSTEMS.

H29
1872

LONDON:
LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.,
1872.

A

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PART I.

THE THEORY OF ETHICS.

CHAP. I.

PRELIMINARY VIEW OF ETHICAL QUESTIONS.

	PAGE
I.—The ETHICAL STANDARD. Summary of views ...	429
II.—PSYCHOLOGICAL questions. 1. The Moral Faculty. 2. The Freedom of the Will; the sources of Disinterested conduct ...	431
III.—The BONUM, SUMMUM BONUM, or Happiness ...	432
IV.—The CLASSIFICATION OF DUTIES, and the Moral Code ...	433
V.—Relationship of Ethics to POLITICS ...	ib.
VI.—Relation to THEOLOGY ...	ib.

CHAP. II.

THE ETHICAL STANDARD.

1. Ethics, as a department of Practice, is defined by its End ...	434
2. The Ethical End is the welfare of society, realized through rules of conduct duly enforced ...	ib.
3. The Rules of Ethics, are of two kinds. The first are imposed under a penalty. These are Laws proper, or Obligatory Morality ...	ib.
4. The second are supported by Rewards; constituting Optional Morality, Merit, Virtue, or Nobleness ...	435
5. The Ethical End, or Morality, as it has been, is founded partly in Utility, and partly in Sentiment ...	437
6. The Ethical End is limited, according to the view taken of Moral Government, or Authority:—Distinction between Security and Improvement ...	438
7. Morality, in its essential parts is 'Eternal and Immutable;' in other parts, it varies with custom ...	440
8. Enquiry as to the kind of proof that an Ethical Standard is susceptible of. The ultimate end of action must be referred to individual judgment ...	ib.
9. The judgment of Mankind is, with some qualifications, in favour of Happiness as the supreme end of conduct ...	441
10. The Ethical end that society is tending to, is Happiness, or Utility ...	442

CONTENTS.

	Page
11. Objections against Utility. I.—Happiness is not the sole aim of human pursuit ... ..	444
12. II.—The consequences of actions are beyond calculation ... ..	445
13. III.—The principle of Utility contains no motives to seek the happiness of others ... ..	446

CHAP. III.

THE MORAL FACULTY.

1. Question whether the Moral Faculty be simple or complex ... ..	448
2. Arguments in favour of its being simple and intuitive:—First, Our moral judgments are immediate and instantaneous ... ..	ib.
3. Secondly, It is a faculty common to all mankind ... ..	ib.
4. Thirdly, It is different from any other mental phenomenon ... ..	449
5. Replies to these Arguments, and Counter-arguments:—First; Immediateness of operation is no proof of an innate origin ... ..	ib.
6. Secondly, The alleged similarity of men's moral judgment holds only in a limited degree. Answers given by the advocates of an Innate sentiment, to the discrepancies ... ..	ib.
7. Thirdly, Moral right and wrong is not an indivisible property, but an extensive Code of regulations ... ..	451
8. Fourthly, Intuition is not sufficient to settle debated questions ... ..	452
9. Fifthly, It is possible to analyze the Moral Faculty:—Estimate of the operation of (1) Prudence, (2) Sympathy, and (3) the Emotions generally ... ..	453
10. The peculiar attribute of Rightness arises from the institution of Government or Authority ... ..	455
11. The speciality of Conscience, or the Moral Sentiment, is identified with our education under Government, or Authority ... ..	456

PART II.

THE ETHICAL SYSTEMS.

SOKRATES. His subjects were Men and Society. His Ethical Standard indistinctly expressed. Resolved Virtue into Knowledge. Ideal of pursuit—Well-doing. Inculcated self-denying Precepts. Political Theory. Connexion of Ethics with Theology slender ... 460

PLATO. Review of the Dialogues containing portions of Ethical Theory:—Alkibiades I. discusses Just and Unjust. Alkibiades II. the Knowledge of Good or Reason. Hippias Minor identifies Virtue with Knowledge. Minos (on Law) refers everything to the decision of an Ideal Wise man. Laches resolves Courage, and Charmides Temperance, into Intelligence or the supreme science of good and evil. Lysis (on Friendship) gives the Idea of the good as the supreme object of affection. Menon enquires, Is virtue teachable? and iterates the science of good and evil. Protagoras makes Pleasure the only good, and Pain the only evil, and defines the cisence of good and evil as the comparison of pleasures and pains.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Gorgias contradicts Protagoras, and sets up Order or Discipline as a final end. Politikus (on Government) repeats the Sokratic ideal of the One Wise Man. Philebus makes Good a compound of Pleasure with Intelligence, the last predominating. The Republic assimilates Society to an Individual man, and defines Justice as the balance of the constituent parts of each. Timæus repeats the doctrine that wickedness is disease, and not voluntary. The Laws place all conduct under the prescription of the civil magistrate. Summary of Plato's views ... ..	463
THE CYNICS AND THE CYRENAICS. Cynic succession. The proper description of the tenets of both schools comes under the Summum Bonum. The Cynic Ideal was the minimum of wants, and their self-denial was compensated by exemption from fear, and by pride of superiority. The Cyrenaic ARISTIPPUS :—Was the first to maintain that the summum bonum is Pleasure and the absence of Pain. Future Pleasures and Pains taken into the account. His Psychology of Pleasure and Pain ... ..	470
ARISTOTLE. Abstract of the Nicomachean Ethics:— ... ..	477
Book First. The Chief Good, or Highest End of human endeavours. Great differences of opinion as to the nature of Happiness. The Platonic Idea of the Good criticized. The Highest End an end-in-itself . Virtue referable to the special work of man; growing out of his mental capacity. External conditions necessary to virtue and happiness. The Soul subdivided into parts, each having its characteristic virtue or excellence ... ..	ib.
Book Second. Definition and classification of the Moral virtues. Virtue the result of Habit. Doctrine of the MEAN. The test of virtue to feel no pain. Virtue defined ( genus ) an acquirement or a State, ( differentia ) a Mean between extremes. Rules for hitting the Mean ... ..	481
Book Third. The Voluntary and Involuntary. Deliberate Preference. Virtue and Vice are voluntary. The virtues in detail:—Courage [Self-sacrifice implied in Courage.] Temperance ... ..	485
Book Fourth. Liberality. Magnificence. Magnanimity. Mildness. Good-breeding. Modesty ... ..	490
Book Fifth. Justice:—Universal Justice includes all virtue. Particular Justice is of two kinds, Distributive and Corrective ... ..	493
Book Sixth. Intellectual Excellences, or Virtues of the Intellect. The Rational part of the Soul embraces the Scientific and the Deliberative functions. Science deals with the necessary. Prudence or the Practical Reason; its aims and requisites. In virtue, good dispositions must be accompanied with Prudence ... ..	495
Book Seventh. Gradations of moral strength and moral weakness. Continnence and Incontinence ... ..	500
Books Eighth and Ninth. Friendship:—Grounds of Friendship. Varieties of Friendship, corresponding to different objects of liking. Friendship between the virtuous is alone perfect. A settled habit, not a mere passion. Equality in friendship. Political friendships. Explanation of the family affections. Rule of reciprocity of services. Conflicting obligations. Cessation of friendships. Goodwill. Love felt by benefactors. Self-love. Does the happy man need friends? ... ..	502
Book Tenth. Pleasure:—Theories of Pleasure—Eudoxus, Speusippus, Plato. Pleasure is not The Good. Pleasure defined.

	PAGE
The pleasures of Intellect. Nature of the Good or Happiness resumed. Perfect happiness found only in the philosophical life; second to which is the active social life of the good citizen. Happiness of the gods. Transition from Ethics to Politics	506
THE STOICS. The succession of Stoical philosophers. Theological Doctrines of the Stoics:—The Divine Government; human beings must rise to the comprehension of Universal Law; the soul at death absorbed into the divine essence; argument from Design. Psychology:—Theory of Pleasure and Pain; theory of the Will. Doctrine of Happiness or the Good:—Pain no Evil; discipline of endurance—Apathy. Theory of Virtue:—Subordination of self to the larger interests; their view of active Beneficence; the Stoical paradoxes; the idea of Duty; consciousness of Self-improvement	513
EPICURUS. Life and writings. His successors. Virtue and vice referred by him to Pleasures and Pains calculated by Reason. Freedom from pain the primary object. Regulation of desires. Pleasure good if not leading to pain. Bodily feeling the foundation of sensibility. Mental feelings contain memory and hope. The greatest miseries are from the delusions of hope, and from the torments of fear. Fear of Death and Fear of the Gods. Relations with others; Justice and Friendship—both based on reciprocity. Virtue and Happiness inseparable. Epicureanism the type of all systems grounded on enlightened self-interest	525
THE NEO-PLATONISTS. The Moral End to be attained through an intellectual regimen. The soul being debased by its connexion with matter, the aim of human action is to regain the spiritual life. The first step is the practice of the cardinal virtues: the next the purifying virtues. Happiness is the undisturbed life of contemplation. Correspondence of the Ethical, with the Metaphysical, scheme	535
SCHOLASTIC ETHICS. ABÆLARD:—Lays great stress on the subjective element in morality; highest human good, love to God; actions judged by intention, and intention by conscience. ST. BERNARD:—Two degrees of virtue, Humanity and Love. JOHN OF SALISBURY:—Combines philosophy and theology; doctrine of Happiness; the lower and higher desires. ALEXANDER OF HALES. BONAVENTURA. ALBERTUS MAGNUS. AQUINAS:—Aristotelian mode of enquiry as to the end; God the highest good; true happiness lies in the self-sufficing theoretic intelligence; virtue; division of the virtues	537
HOBBS. (Abstract of the Ethical part of Leviathan). Constituents of man's nature. The Good. Pleasure. The simple passions. Theory of the Will. Good and Evil. Conscience. Virtue. Position of Ethics in the Sciences. Power, Worth, Dignity. Happiness a perpetual progress; consequences of the restlessness of desire. Natural state of mankind; a state of enmity and war. Necessity of articles of peace, called Laws of Nature. Law defined. Rights; Renunciation of rights; Contract; Merit. Justice. Laws of Gratitude, Complaisance, Pardon upon repentance. Laws against Cruelty, Contumely, Pride, Arrogance. Laws of Nature, how far binding. Summary	543
CUMBERLAND. Standard of Moral Good summed up in Benevolence. The moral faculty is the Reason, apprehending the Nature of

	PAGE
Things. Innate Ideas an insufficient foundation. Will. Disinterested action. Happiness. Moral Code, the common good of all rational beings. Obligations in respect of giving and of receiving. Politics. Religion	556
CUDWORTH. Moral Good and Evil cannot be arbitrary. The mind has a power of Intellection, above Sense, for aiming at the eternal and immutable verities	560
CLARKE. The eternal Fitness and Unfitness of Things determine Justice, Equity, Goodness and Truth, and lay corresponding obligations upon reasonable creatures. The sanction of Rewards and Punishments secondary and additional. Our Duties	562
WOLLASTON. Resolves good and evil into Truth and Falsehood	566
LOCKE. Arguments against Innate Practical Principles. Freedom of the Will. Moral Rules grounded in Law	ib.
BUTLER. Characteristics of our Moral Perceptions. Disinterested Benevolence a fact of our constitution. Our passions and affections do not aim at self as their immediate end. The Supremacy of Conscience established from our moral nature. Meanings of Nature. Benevolence not ultimately at variance with Self-Love	573
HUTCHESON. Primary feelings of the mind. Finer perceptions—Beauty, Sympathy, the Moral Sense, Social feelings; the benevolent order of the world suggesting Natural Religion. Order or subordination of the feelings as Motives; position of Benevolence. The Moral Faculty distinct and independent. Confirmation of the doctrine from the Sense of Honour. Happiness. The tempers and characters bearing on happiness. Duties to God. Circumstances affecting the moral good or evil of actions. Rights and Laws	805
MANDEVILLE. Virtue supported solely by self interest. Compassion resolvable into Self-Love. Pride an important source of moral virtue. Private vices, public benefits. Origin of Society	593
HUME. Question whether Reason or Sentiment be the foundation of morals. The esteem for Benevolence shows that Utility enters into virtue. Proofs that Justice is founded solely on Utility. Political Society has utility for its end. The Laws. Why Utility pleases. Qualities useful to ourselves. Qualities agreeable (1) to ourselves, and (2) to others. Obligation. The respective share of Reason and of Sentiment in moral approbation. Benevolence not resolvable into Self-Love	598
PRICE. The distinctions of Right and Wrong are perceived by the Understanding. The Beauty and Deformity of Actions. The feelings have some part in our moral discrimination. Self-Love and Benevolence. Good and ill Desert. Obligation. Divisions of Virtue. Intention as an element in virtuous action. Estimate of degrees of Virtue and Vice	610
ADAM SMITH. Illustration of the workings of Sympathy. Mutual sympathy. The Amiable and the Respectable Virtues. How far the several passions are consistent with Propriety. Influences of prosperity and adversity on moral judgments. The Sense of Merit and Demerit. Self-approbation. Love of Praise and of Praise-worthiness. Influence and authority of Conscience. Self-partiality: corrected by the use of General Rules. Connection of Utility with Moral Approbation. Influence of Custom on the Moral Sentiments. Character of Virtue. Self-command. Opinion regarding the theory of the Moral Sense	619

	PAGE.
HARTLEY. Account of Disinterestedness. The Moral Sense a product of Association	633
FERGUSON. (Note)	635
REID. Duty not to be resolved into Interest. Conscience an original power of the mind. Axiomatic first principles of Morals. Objections to the theory of Utility.	ib.
STEWART. The Moral Faculty an original power. Criticism of opposing views. Moral Obligation; connexion with Religion. Duties. Happiness; classification of pleasures	639
BROWN. Moral approbation a simple emotion of the mind. Universality of moral distinctions. Objections to the theory of Utility. Disinterested sentiment	646
PALEY. The Moral Sense not intuitive. Happiness. Virtue; its definition. Moral Obligation resolved into the command of God. Utility a criterion of the Divine Will. Utility requires us to consider general consequences. Rights. Duties	651
BENTHAM. Utility the sole foundation of Morals. Principles adverse to Utility. The Four Sanctions of Right. Comparative estimate of Pleasures and Pains. Classification of Pleasures and Pains. Merit and Demerit. Pleasures and pains viewed as Motives; some motives are Social or Tutelary, others Dissocial or Self-regarding. Dispositions. The consequences of a mischievous act. Punishment. Private Ethics (Prudence) and Legislation distinguished; their respective spheres	659
MACKINTOSH. Universality of Moral Distinctions. Antithesis of Reason and Passion. It is not virtuous acts but virtuous dispositions that outweigh the pains of self-sacrifice. The moral sentiments have for their objects Dispositions. Utility. Development of Conscience through Association; the constituents are Gratitude, Sympathy, Resentment, and Shame, together with Education. Religion must presuppose Morality. Objections to Utility criticised. Duties to Ourselves, an improper expression. Reference of moral sentiments to the Will	670
JAMES MILL. Primary constituents of the Moral Faculty—pleasurable and painful sensations. The Causes of these sensations. The Ideas of them, and of their causes. Hope, Fear; Love, Joy; Hatred, Aversion. Remote causes of pleasures and pains—Wealth, Power, Dignity, and their opposites. Affections towards our fellow-creatures—Friendship, Kindness, &c. Motives. Dispositions. Applications to the virtue of Prudence. Justice—by what motives supported. Beneficence. Importance, in moral training, of Praise and Blame, and their associations; the Moral Sanction. Derivation of Disinterested Feelings.	679
AUSTIN. Laws defined and classified. The Divine Laws; how are we to know the Divine Will. Utility the sole criterion. Objections to Utility. Criticism of the theory of a Moral Sense. Prevailing misconceptions as to Utility. Nature of Law resumed and illustrated. Impropriety of the term 'law' as applied to the operations of Nature.	685
WHEWELL. Opposing schemes of Morality. Proposal to reconcile them. There are some actions Universally approved. A supreme Rule of Right to be arrived at by combining partial rules: these are obtained from the nature of our faculties. The rule of Speech is Truth; Property supposes Justice; the Affections indicate

	PAGE
Humanity. It is a self-evident maxim that the Lower parts of our nature are governed by the Higher. Classification of Springs of Action. Disinterestedness. Classification of Moral Rules. Division of Rights	692
FERRIER. Question of the Moral Sense: errors on both sides. Sympathy passes beyond feeling, and takes in Thought or self-consciousness. Happiness has two ends—the maintenance of man's Rational nature, and Pleasure	698
MANSEL. The conceptions of Right and Wrong are sui generis , The moral law can have no authority unless emanating from a lawgiver. The Standard is the moral nature, and not the arbitrary will, of God	700
JOHN STUART MILL. Explanation of what Utilitarianism consists in. Reply to objections against setting up Happiness as the Ethical end. Ultimate Sanction of the principle of Utility: the External and Internal sanctions; Conscience how made up. The sort of Proof that Utility is susceptible of:—the evidence that happiness is desirable, is that men desire it; it is consistent with Utility that virtue should be desired for itself. Connexion between Justice and Utility:—meanings of Justice; essentially grounded in Law; the sentiments that support Justice, are Self-defence, and Sympathy; Justice owes its paramount character to the essential of Security; there are no immutable maxims of Justice	702
BAILEY. Facts of the human constitution that give origin to moral phenomena:—susceptibility to pleasure and pain, and to the causes of them; reciprocation of these; our expecting reciprocation from others; sympathy. Consideration of our feelings in regard to actions done to us by others. Our feelings as spectators of actions done to others by others. Actions done to ourselves by others. The different cases combine to modify each other. Explanation of the discrepancies of the moral sentiment in different communities. The consequences of actions the only criterion for rectifying the diversities. Objections to the happiness-test. The term Utility unsuitable. Disputes as to the origin of moral sentiment in Reason or in a Moral Sense	714
SPENCER. Happiness the ultimate, but not the proximate, end. Moral Science a deduction from the laws of life and the conditions of existence. There have been, and still are, developing in the race, certain fundamental Moral Intuitions. The Expediency-Morality is transitional. Reference to the general theory of Evolution	721
KANT. Distinguishes between the empirical and the rational mode of treating Ethics. Nothing properly good, except Will . Subjection of Will to Reason. An action done from natural inclination is worthless morally. Duty is respect for Law; conformity to Law is the one principle of volition. Moral Law not ascertainable empirically, it must originate a priori in pure (practical) Reason. The Hypothetical and Categorical Imperatives. Imperative of Prudence. Imperative of Morality. The formula of Morality. The ends of Morality. The Rational nature of man is an end-in-itself. The Will the source of its own laws—the Autonomy of the Will. The Realm of Ends. Morality alone has Intrinsic Worth or Dignity. Principles founded on the	